Rev. A. D. Raleigh Preaches on the Fullness of Time or the Coming of Christ.

Why the Saviour Delayed His Mission to Redeem Mankind.

Rev. C. B. Allen in Speaking on "Faith and Bellef." Says No Accidents Ever Happened.

Rev. A. D. Raleigh preached on "The Fullness of Time," at St. Paul's M. E. church last night. "In the fullness of time the Lord sent forth a son to redeem the world." As we near Christmas time our thoughts naturally revert to the birth of the redeemer. For four thousand years the people made sacrifices on the burning altars and still the saviour did not come, but the followers of Abraham never lost faith in the belief that he would come to save them. He lingered in his coming, but it was because humanity was not ready to receive him; it had not reached the proper age of civilization. It is now 1890 years sice Christ came upon earth. At that time Palestine was the central point for the great civilized nations of the earth; when Jesus came universal peace reigned—the world was quiet. Rome then governed the world and the Greek language was known and understood in all the civilized nations. It was amidst In all the civilized nations. It was amidst Judaism that Christ first saw light as a babe in Bethlehem. It is a mistake to think that the Jews rejected Jesus. They were the first to be converted to Christianity and in Jerusalem the foundation o, the church was laid; the world was then in a state of intellectual advancement.

When Jesus cone there was an universal

When Jesus came there was an universal expentancy for one that would revolutionize the world. This expectancy even found its way to China where Confucius made it known throughout the empire and sent forth disciples, who returned and taught Buddishm. It was this expectancy that led three wise men from the east to the stable in Bethlehem. The speaker did not know whether these were Persian priests, or the disciples of Confucius or, as Lew Wallace in "Ben Hurr" writes, the representatives of three great nations who were guided by a star. great nations who were guided by a star. But they were an old gray haired man, one in the prime of manhood with bearded face, and a beardless youth, thus representing manhood ready to receive Carist. The speaker said he was glad that the world was in sin because the world has such a won-derful savior. He would rather be a sinner derful savior. He would rather be a sinner than saint, knowing if he sinned he would have Christ to save him and elevate him, while if he were a saint he would be ever conscious that sin was confronting him and that in an unguarded moment he might fall into the abyss never to be released. The graces and charms of life are amidst its trials and sufferings and the goodness of God and his love for man relieves the pangs of the latter when sought for. Man's love for Jesus, he thought, was more ardent than Adam's love for God. In the fulness of time God will call all his beings to him and those who prove worthy of him will join him in his heavenly abode.

Red. Mr. Allen on Faith and Belief. Following is a brief outline of the elo quent sermon delivered by Rev. C. B. Allen at the Baptist church Sunday evening. The minister took his text from the last clause of the 14th chapter of the gospel according of St. John. "Believe in God; believe also in me." He showed that it was the intention of the Savior to impress upon his disciples the importance of strong and abiding faith. It seemed strange that people nowadays should find it necessary to be exhorted to believe; yet, we needed it. When beset by storms and trials of adversity, then we should have faith to enable us to bear our burdens. Faith was always present, but it was sometimes latent. The minister illustrated his point by describing the latent power of electricity. It might be produced by rubbing a metallic subtance with the hand, but it was not powerful enough to communicate with a friend in New York. Faith in God should be strong enough to withstand all tests; it is a belief in His Word and truth, as illustrated in business, where men have confidence and of the 14th chapter of the gospel according business, where men have confidence and trust for one another. Believe in the word of the truth; live by it and let it be your guide, he said. Believe in the goodness of God, who regards us with infinite love and compasregards us with infinite love and compassion. He will supply our wants and help us to overcome all difficulties. The text lays emphasis upon the fact that God is a supeme personal God, and that we are responsible to Him for all our words and acts. Christ is an ever-present personal friend, not far away; but it is hard for many to grasp this truth. Yet it comes in adversity and gives peace of mind and contented hearts.

Everything in the world has taken place because God has ordered it or permitted it. It is a truth freighted with profound significance that no accident has ever happened in the world. It was either ordered or permitted by God, who has a personal supervision over all, the pagans of ancient Rome believed in an ever present, personal God, who guided their enterprises to success or failure. Nothing ever happens unless it be for the good of those who believe in God. In prosperity faith is weak, and we are apt to rely perity faith is weak, and we are apt to rely too much upon ourselves, but when afflic-tion and adversity overtake us what can save us from despair except an abiding faith in the goodness of God.

Last week two more of the bring, threw off his coat, and with a loud whoop sprang out of the wagon, and carecred wildly over the prairie in pursuit of the fox. It is not known whether he was in at the death or not. Another fox turned townward, and arrived, followed by a wildly enthusiastic crowd, both mounted and driving, just as the children were going to Sunday school. The fever seized the latter. The fox darted across the railway track, and the children rushed pell mell in the pursuit. Religiously inclined people felt much shocked, and we hear that the matter was reported to the police. It is hinted, however, that it is not only the ungodly of Lethbridge, who take a keen interest in fox hunting, even if the meet does take place on a Sunday.

COMMERCIAL FREEDOM.

Facts and Figures Which Show How to Promote Trade With Other Countries. The subject of commercial freedom is being more actively discussed than ever before, says the Wausau, Wis., Pilot Review. We are holding now a congress of representatives of the different South America republics for the purpose of finding out how best to promote trade between them and the United States. We have had a little free trade with some of the Southern countries on some commodities, and it will repay us to see what the results have been.

In 1870 we bought of the people of Venezuela products valued at $2.037,312, and we sold to them of our own products $1,345,145 worth. Our entire trade in buying and selling with that country amounted to $3,382,-457. Venezuela had but two great articles of export, coffee and hides, and what we bought consisted mainly of these two ar-

What have been the results?
In 1876, but six years later, we purchased from Venezuela, products of that country valued at $5,844,710, and we sold to that country our products valued at $3,424,278.
To repeat—our total trade with that country under a high protective tariff on her principal commodities in 1870 was $3,445,-145. We removed this tariff and in but six years' time our trade had increased to the years' time our trade had increased to the large total of $9,299,993. But now let us look at the effect upon the shipping trade we had with that country. In 1870 we had fifteen vessels engaged in the In 1870 we had fifteen vessels engaged in the trade with Venezuela with a capacity of 2.271 tons. These employed 109 sailors.

In 1876 the American shipping engaged in the Venezuela trade amounted to 134 vessels with a tonnage of 43,459, and upon these vessels were employed 1,255 hands.

He dwells at much length on the case of Barttelot, and says the latter needs to extricate himself from his dilemma, qualities that will not be gained save by qualities that will not be gained save by long experience in Africa, and eulogizes Barttelot's courage and high qualities. Stanley finally denies with much emphasis the alleged Congo atrocities and the story of photographing women during execution. During the whole expedition he executed only four men.
